DAY IN THE HOUSE AND IN THE SENATE

WASHINGTON, April 11.—The Culbertson amendment to the postoffice appropriation bill providing for a commission to investigate the Postoffice department was before the Senate all of today and after being ruled out of order in modified form, was pending when the Senate adjourned.

Mr. Gorman made an earnest plea for an investigation, saying the Postoffice department was in a bad condition, and that a thorough examination should be had.

Mr. Aldrich answered that the amendment would be a "live one" and that if any special charges were brought in they should be looked into by Congress, but that the demand should not be made a part of a general appropriation bill.

Semi-political speeches were made by Messrs. Teller and Simmons.

Simmons Answers Spooner.

In the debate on the postal bill Mr. Spooner, who defended Postmaster-General Payne, who had been treated as an attack by Mr. Simmons in previous remarks, Mr. Simmons declared that his remarks were not intended to reflect on the Postoffice department, but to reflect on the Postmaster-General.

Mr. Spooner said he had been charged with advocating the selection of a neutral man for President. He (Simmons) had demanded a calm, well-poised disposition and mind, judicial and conservative temperament, and asked whether that would be regarded as a neutral man.

Turning to the Republican side, he said that the candidate wanted was one who would overturn affairs of the twentieth century, make new laws when the present ones did not suit, and treat with foreign countries without the consent of the Senate.

He said the country has witnessed the spectacle of a President held forth on one hand as a trust-buster and on the other as a safe man for business.

Mr. Spooner said that the original trust-buster, the Attorney-General, who has acted as lord high executioner, and a score of more assistants," said Mr. Simmons, "and they have managed to find two trusts to prosecute."

Continuing, Mr. Simmons asked: "What do the people want—a man who will execute their will or a man who will bend them to his will?" He urged an investigation of the Postoffice department.

Mr. Lodge then urged his point of order against the Culbertson amendment, and Mr. Gorman insisted on the amendment.

Mr. Gorman said that the amendment was a liberal construction of the rules the chair or the Senate could hold anything in order.

Gorman Persists.

The point of order was sustained, but Mr. Gorman persisted and made vain efforts to bring it within the rule, and finally eliminated all provisions for appropriations. Mr. Gorman said conditions in the Postoffice department were such as to make an inquiry imperative.

The report of the Postmaster-General charged members of Congress with being confederates of Machen and Beavers, and that Congress could not afford to ignore the charges.

Mr. Gorman said that the department's reflection upon Congress he denounced as an "outrage," and said that instead of being a question of politics, it was a question of honor and integrity of Congress were in question. He pronounced the Postmaster-General an honest man, but said he was to be criticized for failing to demand an inquiry.

With only four Democrats out of nine members of the commission, nothing would be permitted to get out. If the matter was to have any effect in the present campaign it was now in the hands of the Republican party, he said, and the Republican party refused to permit an inquiry.

Hiding the Books.

"Senators on the other side," he said, "may regard their case so desperate that they will not permit any light to be thrown on the books. Well, you have the power, of course, and you can prevent an inquiry if you wish to do so, as you have two-thirds of the members of the Senate."

Mr. Aldrich replied, saying: "The amendment in its present shape shows the folly of attempting such legislation as this on an appropriation bill. Mr. Gorman has endeavored to make it so that it is of no effect whatever. If we are to have an investigation, let it be a live one."

Then let us have one," suggested Mr. Gorman,
